About Young Women's Health and Technology

The Brooklyn Alliance Young Women's Health and Technology program teaches young women about technology and how to do health research. We came together for 7 months to develop this website. Our time was spent in workshops given by different technology and health professionals, learning how to program in HTML, reading articles and books on our chosen topics, interviewing experts, taking digital photos, creating original digital art, and writing content.

Some of the workshops included:

- "Women of Color and the Media" by Whitney Baker of MTV.
- "How Does the Internet Work?" by Christine Stearn of NPower.
- "Finding and Interpreting Census Data Online" by Molly McNees of Lutheran Health Care.
- "What's Inside a Computer?" by Adriana Aquilera and Figuring out what the pieces are.

An expansion card that lets you add new features to a computer such as the ability to record and play sound.
